Japan Agrees To Accept The Principle and Leave Details To Experts

CABINET TO MEET

The French Cabinet Virtually Agrees To Tantamount Rejection of Plan

By Luther Huston

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

TOKYO, Feb. 12.—Japan will accept President Coolidge's proposal for a real naval disarmament conference at Geneva in principle, leaving the experts to attend to the details, the foreign office stated today.

The cabinet will meet Tuesday to consider a reply which will likely be made next week.

The Foreign Office declared that Japan will propose no reservations.

PARIS, Feb. 12.—The French cabinet, in a three hour session today at the Elysee Palace, virtually agreed upon a reply to President Coolidge's disarmament proposals which was tantamount to a rejection it was learned.

The reply which was drafted by Foreign Minister Briand and the foreign office experts, was a diplomatic statement couched in soft terms, but its effect was that of rejection it was learned.

Suggestions as to changes in the draft were made and the final draft will be laid before the cabinet on Tuesday.

HIGH SCHOOL FIVE DEFEAT LANGHORNE

Bristol Quintet Put Up Fast Game and Win by Score 39 to 21

GIRLS LOSE THEIR GAME

Bristol High last evening defeated Langhorne 39 to 21 in a fast and interesting basketball game.

Both teams displayed good passing and Bristol's stellar defensive game was responsible for the victory. It was when Langhorne started a rally that Bristol played her best.

Langhorne scored first through a foul shot and followed this with a field goal by Mather. Langhorne was not long in the lead, however, Bristol scoring on goals by Strumfels and Wright. In this half both teams played fast basketball, and Bristol was more accurate in shooting. The score at the end of the half was 21 to 14 in Bristol's favor.

At the start of the second half Bristol displayed a fine passing attack and immediately increased their lead. Langhorne scored often with field goals by Mather, their star forward. At the end of the third quarter Bristol held a good lead and increased it. Langhorne never was dangerous.

Wright and Strumfels, Bristol's forwards, played a fine game each scoring 11 points. Opdyke played a money subscribed.
good game at guard and scored nine points.

Mather, of Langhorne, played a very fast game at forward and gave Spadaccino and Opdyke quite some trouble in keeping him from the basket. He scored a total of twelve points.

BRISTOL VETERAN SHOOK HANDS WITH LINCOLN ON 3 DIFFERENT OCCASIONS—PROUD OF THE FACT

James Marshall Says "Honest Abe" Was A Good Man—Had Quiet Nature And A Sober Expression—Veteran Has Good War Record

THE MEMORY of Abraham Lincoln, friend of the slave, and upholder of the Right, has been enshrined for years in the heart of a Bristol Civil War veteran; and the name of the Great Emancipator continually falls from his lips in sentences of praise.

Many times has James Marshall, 924 Pond street, seen the tall, straight figure of his Commander-in-Chief pass through the halls of hospitals, stopping here and there to lend encouragement to some stricken man.

"Oh, but he was a good man," said the veteran as he pounded the arm of the chair in which he sat, to lend emphasis to his words. "He had a good heart, and the name of Lincoln will never die out. Why, just think! He helped to free four million slaves."

Mr. Marshall saw Lincoln on several occasions, and remembers him as being of a quiet nature, with a very sober expression. "This hand shook that of Lincoln three times, and I'll never forget him," he tells. President Lincoln visited Fort Stevens when the rebels tried to get to Washington, and there mingled with the Union troops.

It was on August 20, 1861, that Mr. Marshall enlisted, and during the three years of service he saw, he engaged in 42 battles. "I was in Company B, of the Second Pennsylvania Cavalry, Second Brigade, Second Division, of the Second Army Corps, and I rode a horse all the time I was in the army."

Continuing to relate his vivid experiences during this crisis, the ex-soldier volunteered, "I had two horses killed under me, and when one of them was shot I was wounded too. A ball from a rifle struck me in the thigh, but I didn't get off duty. I just fought on, but I certainly hated to lose that animal, because I was so attached to it."

On the occasion of the reception tendered to the war-time president at his second inauguration, Mr. Marshall was present, together with hundreds of civilians who gathered to show their appreciation of Lincoln's services. "He surely shook hands with lots of people that day," Mr. Marshall continued, as his eyes shone with the love he bore his commander.

"I remember one time when one of our buddies went home to see his wife. He had been wounded just before he left the camp, but not seriously. This man was brought back to camp and court marshalled as a deserter, but Lincoln said to Secretary Stewart, 'Stewart, were you ever in battle?' Stewart answered, 'No.' Then said the President, 'Well, I've reconsidered my decision. This man has not been married long, and it's hard for one to be away from home, especially when injuries occur, and I'm going to pardon him.'" This act of Lincoln was never forgotten by those who knew the circumstances.

Referring to the Battle of Gettysburg, Mr. Marshall said, "That was a fight at Gettysburg. I remember that one fellow said 'If there's any glory to be had on this battlefield, I'll have it,' and he received that glory for at 10 o'clock that morning he was shot dead. He was a young officer, and we all liked him. The men were sorry to have him leave us."

Mr. Marshall is so enthused when he reads the words of Lincoln that to each of his grandchildren he gives a one dollar bill when they complete memorizing Lincoln's Gettysburg address. He likes to study it himself, and for hours will read over clippings from papers and magazines that deal with the movements of the armies of that day, and the facts which are given from time to time concerning the Civil War.

In Bristol there still remain two others who served in the Civil War under this great commander-in-chief. They are James Jolly, Wilson street; and Michael Dougherty, Dorrance street. Mr. Marshall will be 87 years of age on the 10th of next August. He still enjoys excellent health, and although unable to hear as well as he once did, still keeps his mind refreshed by keeping up on topics of the day through newspapers and periodicals.

PLAN TO START ACTIVE BOYS' WORK DRIVE

Doylestown Organizations Discuss Preliminaries At The Meeting

TO FORM SCOUTS

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 12.—At an enthusiastic meeting here yesterday representatives of the various service clubs and churches of the community went on record as favoring a proposed movement to start an intensive boys' work campaign by the establishment of several more Boy Scout troops and to support to a greater degree the Boys' Brigade that for years has been carried along by "Uncle George" Murray, of this borough.

Kiwanis, Rotary, American Legion and the church representatives met at the Court House and heard William F. Livermore, special deputy regional Scout executive outline the plans for increased Scout work throughout the Bucks county boroughs.

The plan calls for the expenditure of $12,500 for a two-year plan of Scout activities in Bucks county. That is the estimated budget. There is already available a sum amounting to $4666 so that about $8000 will be raised by general subscription in the various boroughs of the county.

The meeting here yesterday had to do with the Doylestown and central district. Similar meetings have been held throughout the county and on February 21 there will be a county meeting for the purpose of organizing a Scout Council in Bucks county. Various towns will send seven delegates to this meeting.

In Doylestown, whatever is done will be in direct co-operation with the Boys' Brigade work and the amount of money to be raised will be for Boys' work in general, the two organizations, Scouts and Brigade to receive a proportionate share of the

INLAND WATERWAYS SAVE HUGE AMOUNT

Shippers of 41 States Save Approximately $1,500,000 It Is Said

OPERATE BARGE LINES

By Mauritz A. Hallgren

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—Shippers of 41 States were saved $1,500,000 in freight costs last year by using the Mississippi and Warrior River barge lines, the Inland Waterway Corporation announced today in a statement reviewing the results of co-operation between these federal barge lines and 165 railroads.

Use of the waterways also added "in the neighborhood of seven million dollars" to the pockets of the farmers, the statement asserts.

"This corporation," it is set forth, "through its cheap water rates on grain for export set the price, according to records of the St. Louis Merchants Exchange, so that the farmer received for his grain nearly three cents a bushel more than he would have otherwise received. This additional price of three cents per bushel was not alone confined to the grain shipments by the facilities of the barge line, but according to the statements of great grain dealers themselves, set the price at which the hundreds of millions of bushels exported was purchased from the farmer. Assuming that these statements of great grain dealers are correct, then this service on grain alone gave to the farmer in actual cash in 1926 approximately $7,000,000.

Other important benefits accrued to shippers of cotton, sugar, coal, sulphur, bauxite and manganese ores, the statement declared, thus reducing "the cost of the manufacture of power, gas and heat," and enabling "vast quantities of steel to be manufactured cheaper."

A. O. H. and Bristol A. A. finished the first half of the basketball league with victories that place them in a three-cornered tie with Celtic for second place. The Knights of Columbus finished on top with six victories and no defeats.

The "Hibs" defeated St. Ann's rather handily by the score of 35 to 8 in the first game Thursday night in Lutheran Hall.

"Sid" Sweeney netted 4 field goals and a foul. Johnny and Lawrence Brady alternated at the other forward position and got 3 field and 3 foul goals between them. Dugan had two 2-pointers and 2 foul goals. "Huby" Brady and Weiss played a great defensive game, the former arching 3 field goals and one foul and Weiss shooting the other 2 field goals.

Puchino and Petrose each shot a field goal and foul marker, while Giagnacova added the other two points via the foul route.

Les Bailey's uncanny shooting from any angle of the court, Gene Dugan's and Jim Sackville's great floor work were also features. BRISTOL'S MANY ADVANTAGES WON NEW SOAP INDUSTRY

Water Supply And Excellent Shipping Advantages Were The Attractions

LOOKED MANY PLACES

Numerous Sites Were Examined Before Location Was Selected

Final settlement is to be made Tuesday for that portion of the Harriman shipyard property which was recently purchased by the Manhattan Soap Co., 422-430 West 38th street, New York City. Final inspection of the property previous to taking permanent possession was made Thursday when two representatives of the firm were here.

Alfred H. Garrigues, technical man, and Alfred M. Miles, general superintendent, spent the greater part of Thursday here attending to the final details before completion of the transaction which will give them possession of the property.

The two gentlemen were interviewed by a Courier representative in the reading room of the Elks' Home. Both Mr. Garrigues and Mr. Miles had just returned from the weekly luncheon of the Bristol Rotary Club and they willingly consented to give some details concerning their proposed plans for establishing their industry here.

"Why did you select Bristol as a location?" a Courier representative interrogated.

"Well, we looked over a large section of the country before we did decide to come to Bristol," replied Mr. Garrigues. "We finally selected the site here because of the labor conditions; close proximity to the coal fields; free water; cheap insurance; and the excellent shiping conditions."

By way of explanation Mr. Garrigues went on to state that because of the site being along the Delaware River his firm would be enabled to secure all of the raw water that was needed without any other cost than that of pumping it from the stream. "In New York I presume that we spent approximately $5,000 yearly for water. This is a big item."

Then the better shipping conditions was dwelt upon and Mr. Garrigues said that the facilities here would afford them a wonderful saving in their raw product. We now purchase in drum lots because we do not have railroad siding. When we locate here we will receive much of our raw materials in tank cars and this will result in another saving."

"We now are keeping several five-ton trucks busy hauling our finished product to shipping points. Here we will load directly into the cars and thus eliminate another big item of expense."

Questioned as to the capacity of the plant Mr. Garrigues said that the New York plant is now putting out daily approximately 1,500 boxes of 100 cakes each. "This is our slack season."

The Manhattan Soap Company manufactures a high grade toilet soap which retails at a popular price. There are two leading brands—"Sweetheart Toilet Soap" and "Coaline," a hardwater soap. The latter brand, according to Mr. Miles, is extensively sold in the Florida territory and he states that it will lather in salt water. "There is absolutely nothing objectionable about our plant, there is no objectionable odor—in fact there is a perfume wafted through the air. I have been in automobiles and after leaving others would enter and in a minute would say 'Miles has been in here.' This was due to the fact that I had carried sweet scented perfume in my clothing which in turn had scented the car."

It is expected that the new firm will begin manufacturing here on or about October 1st. Immediately after taking possession of the property, work of making alterations and renovations to the buildings which are to be used will start.

The first building to be remodeled will be the machinery storage building. This is to be used for the heavy machinery where the basic ingredients will be manufactured. "We positively do not do any rendering," Mr. Garrigues stated. "In this building we will make the soap chips and glycerine and then this building will contain our boiler rooms. The work of adapting the buildings to our use will take practically all of the summer. We expect to begin manufacturing about October 1st."

What has been known as the shipwright shop will be used as a pressing and wrapping department. Here the soap will be pressed into shape and wrapped. Commenting further upon the fact of the plant not being objectionable Mr. Garrigues said that many of the materials they use are eatable.

The new industry does not for the present plan to use any of the loft building. This building will be rented or perhaps sold. It is now planned to erect an office building about where the No. 1 gate is located. This will

LINCOLN'S ELOQUENCE

In recent years we have been accustomed to having our presidents speak on a great variety of topics. Thus we become acquainted with their views and abilities outside the realm of purely political matters.

It happens that the utterances of Abraham Lincoln outside his political deliverances are meager. His debates with Stephen A. Douglass, in which he gained fame as a speaker, and his Cooper Union address, in which he introduced himself to the East, dealt with issues long since passed away. His skill as a political orator was generally recognized but his reputation for eloquence in other lines was gained late and is founded on limited productions. The mass of his utterances while president had to do with the prosecution of the war. While clear and succinct they gave little opportunity for demonstration of his real powers of composition.

Possibly the fact that Lincoln's entire time was taken up with the prosecution of the war, and that the demands of the conflict submerged every other interest, may be responsible for Lincoln's failure to leave more examples of his ability to say the proper word in the happiest way. That he had few equals, perhaps no superior, in facility of expression is now acknowledged. And this verdict of posterity, for it was not promptly recognized at the time, rests on two productions—the Gettysburg address and the second inaugural.

In an address at Cambridge University some years ago Earl Curzon in citing supreme masterpieces of English eloquence mentioned three. One of these was the toast of William Pitt following the battle of Trafalgar. The other were the two efforts of Lincoln noted above. For sympathetic expression of condolence the Mrs. Bixby letter is not less a model. Outside his political utterances Abraham Lincoln did not leave a mass by which we may judge of his ability in expression but what he did leave is enough to stamp him a master of English eloquence.

FASTIDIOUS

It has been said, and truthfully, that Paris designs the clothing and America wears it. None will deny that the American is the best dressed individual in the world. This does not mean that Americans overdress, but that the average man, woman and child in this country has better and more clothing than do those of other countries.

Only a few years ago the well-dressed man and woman on the street was the exception. There were many of these exceptions, but there were more people down-at-the-heel, unpressed and threadbare.

During the last decade communities of all sizes have witnessed a phenomenal increase in the number of retail dealers in wearing apparel for men, women and children. There are dozens of each kind in even the moderately sized cities and in no other business has the tendency to specialize been so marked. The modern town and city, in addition to its department and clothing stores, now has its shirt shops, waist shops, hosiery shops, hat stores, boys' clothing stores and children's shops.

And it isn't that they are more vain that more people are wearing better clothing. It is because modern standards of living demand and warrant it.

CHAPTER XI

THE DISCOVERY

THE next day dawned cold and dark for two people. Tom was depressed. He had spent the previous evening at Gwen's, and in spite of the fact that Gwen had thoroughly enjoyed herself, Tom had been miserable all the time. The very vivacity of his fiancee was torture to him. Grace, on her part came into the office with the intention of being all business. She was.

The crowds that stormed the store were even greater, however, than on the previous day. News of the wonderful bargains seemed to have taken the city by storm. The doorman had to call on the police for assistance in keeping the customers in line in front of the store. No one was permitted to enter until someone was seen to go out. Had it not been for the foresight of Crabb in ordering twice the supply of goods that they usually sold in a week there would not have been anything to sell. But that thorough-going villain had, through Miss Abbott, ordered what he considered would clog the store and make it impossible for Tom to sell anywhere near the amount of his purchases.

The new and startling costumes of the salesgirls were a feature that attracted trade, too. The other stores of the city were taking notice of the unwarranted prices that Eggett's was advertising and the tremendous amount of business that the store was doing. Many of them sent representatives to the Eggett Store to take notes. It was so different to the old staid, conservative manner of doing business that had been practiced by the Crabb management that alarm was being felt throughout the entire dry-goods trade.

In spite of his personal worries and unhappiness, Tom was delighted at the splendid success that he was making as a storekeeper. But Grace in her reserve, was now able to tell Tom the things that he ought to know, about the character of the business that he was doing and the way that Crabb was trying to ruin him for his own ultimate advantage. The opportunity presented itself as Tom came back to the office from a characteristic attempt to assist customers to find the things they came to buy. Looking over at her desk he noted how serious she was. Thinking it had to do with the personal matter which had so upset them both the day before, and hoping to get the matter straightened out, or at least get her to talk about it, he said:

"You look very serious this morning, Miss Secretary."

"I am serious," she replied rising and facing him. "Will you please sit down at your desk for a few moments. I must tell you what I have been trying for the last two days to say. Something always comes up to interrupt me." A faint blush rose in her cheeks as she said that word, "something." Mostly the interruptions had been very pleasant ones. Tom sat at his desk obediently. When he was in the proper frame of mind, Grace sat down in her dictating seat and spread out before him the several newspapers that had been printed since he took over the store, opened to the Eggett & Co. advertisement. Beside it she placed the letter from the bank. Tom looked at them uncomprehendingly.

"Well, what do these things mean? These ads look all right to me."

"That's because you don't know the cost of the things that we sell. The managers, that first day were trying to tell you, until that precious pair of assistants of yours butted in with their ideas of what was the matter. They don't know any more about it than you do. Pardon me for saying this, but I have been here for three years and right here where I have had an opportunity to know just what we were paying for all the things we sell, and just what they ought to sell for to make a profit. Just look at these prices. They are ridiculous. No wonder the people are crazy to buy them. They would have to pay three times as much for you to make a profit on most articles."

Tom was dumbfounded. It was all Greek to him. He looked at Grace as though she were of a superior order of intelligence.

"What does it all mean? I confess you know a lot more about it than I."

"I wouldn't know what it all meant, either, if I had not happened to open this letter the very morning that you took charge. Crabb fired me because I opened it. Read it and then I'll tell you."

Tom read the letter. Still he did not understand. The letter made him mad, though, and he knew that the matter had to do with Crabb.

"Now, then," said Grace earnestly, "this is what I have been trying to tell you all this time. You must make a profit in three months or you don't get the store. You know that, but this is what you don't know. You don't know that Crabb gets it if you don't make good. I overheard them, Crabb and Abbott, talking and I know that's in the will. Now do you understand? Crabb and Miss Abbott are framing you and they will get the store if they can prevent you from making a profit. And they are doing the advertising for you and selling goods at these figures and overstocking the store for that purpose."

Grace (Blanche Mehaffey) warns Tom (Reginald Denny) of Crabb's plans to bankrupt him.

Scene from "TAKE IT FROM ME."

As the truth dawned on him, Tom's jaw, usually so accommodating looking, began to set itself in hard, determined lines. Grace liked the look. It indicated to her that he was going to fight. As he arose and began pacing back and forth, the look deepened. Turning suddenly to Grace he said:

"Please see if you can find Soup and Fish and send them to me."

"Yes, I will. And, Mr. Eggett, I'd like you to know that I will help you every way I can," said Grace as she paused in the doorway.

"Thank you, I'm going to need all your help."

The first smile that morning greeted that admission of his need.

Grace was scarcely out of the little hallway when Dick burst in the other door with a very frightened and uncomfortable looking woman in tow. He was on skates, but she was on thin ice.

"Look what I found," he announced proudly.

"What is it?" asked Tom rising and looking critically at the well-dressed, but slightly out-of-proportioned woman Dick held so tightly by the arm.

For answer, Dick made a quick motion at the woman's throat. His hand came back with the toe of a silk stocking. It was followed by a weird assortment of small articles of merchandise, from a Silver Fox scarf to a diamond ring and a rope of pearls.

"Shoplifting," ejaculated Tom. "How long has this been going on?" for want of anything better to say. It wasn't like Tom to preach.

"Oh, sir, please let me go. I don't do this for a living. Honestly. It's only for the thrill it gives me." So amazed was Dick at this effrontery of the woman that he dropped her arm. Seeing her chance, the shoplifter dodged out of the door and down the hall. The men being on roller skates were at a disadvantage. She had a good start before they had picked themselves up and begun to make headway.

"Dick, wait a moment. Let the others chase her. I want to see you," said Tom. He was so serious that Dick returned immediately, picking up stockings, neckties and the like as he came. Van came in the next moment and the three shut the doors and went into executive session.

In a few words, Tom explained the situation to them and showed them how impossible it was going to be for them to make a profit at the pace they were going—that is, backward.

"This is a serious situation, boys. We have got to think of some way out. I hate like thunder to give in to that old fossil, Crabb. We should be able between the three of us to beat him at his own game. It's most distasteful to think of that old geezer enjoying the business that my father built up. And I feel certain that it would make my father terribly peeved. The old gentleman would turn over in his grave. He was just trying to make a man of me. And until yesterday I never cared a straw whether or not I could make good. And that's the truth.

Tom gave an involuntary glance at the door of the room where Grace was typing away as he said this. Soup and Fish settled themselves to do some serious thinking. They looked much as they had the other day when they had first assumed the mantle of big business.

Suddenly Dick had an idea. Clapping his hands to his head, he exclaimed:

"I've got it. We can put the store on the bum so bad that Crabb won't inherit a thing."

"Great," shouted Van slapping Dick on the shoulder. "Worthy of Napoleon."

"Yes, Napoleon retreating from Moscow," growled Tom. "Come, be yourselves. Where do we get off, doing a thing like that?"

"Well," said Van, "according to you, we don't get off nohow. Maybe we can sell short in some way. Make a book on it."

"I know what's the matter with you," said Dick, who was very proud of his idea. "You're afraid that fiancee of yours will give you the air if you go broke."

This was a shot in the dark, but it hit an unusually vulnerable target. Tom had not thought of this solution of his heart trouble. The more he thought of the matter now the better he liked the plan. If he could not win out anyway, what was the use of trying? And if he did win out, what was the prospect? He would lose Grace and have to keep Gwen.

"But, do you really think she'd break off the engagement on her own account if she thought I was broke?"

Loud bursts of laughter greeted this ingenuous question.

"Of course she would, booby," said Van, letting some of the disdain he had for Miss Forsythe creep into his voice. "I know her gait. She's just a gold digger."

"All right," said Tom thoroughly converted to the idea by this time. "Take it from me, we'll bust 'er and but 'er good and proper."

The three began a war dance around the desk. But a sudden thought struck Tom.

"One thing, though, fellers," he warned. "Miss Gordon, my secretary, mustn't know about what we are doing. She must think we are trying to make good. I'll let you in on a secret. I never knew what love was until I saw her. Now it seems as though I had loved her all my life. But I've got to get Miss Forsythe out of her engagement or she won't look at me. That's the main reason I am so strong for this idea, if it will do that."

"Fine," said Dick, solemnly shaking Tom's hand. "She's a thoroughbred, and the plan will do just what we all want. I congratulate you, kid. You get the girl. We get Crabb. Crabb gets nothing."

"O-kay," said Tom. "You think up some ideas to bust us, while I look up Miss Gordon and try to find some expensive things for the store to do."

"How about having a moving picture company come in here and make a picture?" asked Van, as the boys settled into the most comfortable office chairs and stuck their roller-skated feet on Tom's desk. "That would break up a lot of stuff, and we could pretend that we were doing it for the advertising we would get."

"Better still," said Dick, "let's put on the gol-darndest fashion show this little old town ever saw. Professional models, bathing suits, show girls, cloth of gold gowns, silver-lined negligees." And so they planned.

Tom, in the meantime had been thinking along just as expensive lines. When he at last found Grace, he told her he was going to close the store for a few weeks to make certain alterations and that he was going to send all the employes to the seaside during that time—at the expense of the store.

"But," protested Grace, "that will cost a terrible lot of money. You can't afford it in the short time you have to make good."

"Yes, we can," replied Tom. He had taken to using the "we" lately. "The employes will have a vacation, anyway. Let them take it all at the same time, and show the appreciation of the store for their faithful services all these years. It will pay in the end in added loyalty." Tom did not believe this himself, but he made Grace believe it. Tom had a very persuasive way with him.

As they were passing through the Blanket Department, Tom heard the buyer arguing in loud tones with a salesman. He stopped to listen.

"What's the matter here?" he asked curiously.

"Why, this man is trying to sell us horse blankets. Says his horse blankets are the best in the world. But you know we have not sold a dozen horse blankets in a year. Nobody in this town has a horse," and he began to laugh at his own cleverness.

He nearly jumped out of his boots when Tom calmly said to him:

"Tell him to send us three carloads of blankets immediately."

You Can't Build A Successful Life Without a Plan

If we want to reach the closing years of life with an independent income, all that most of us need do is adopt a definite economic plan of life—a plan by which we govern our purchase of automobile transportation with the same good judgment, economy, and restraint that we exercise in buying our houses, our furniture, and all of our other daily needs.

[Not that we want to be "tight-fisted"—heavens, No! But when we can buy a closed Ford car, with deep roomy seats and easy riding balloon tires, for less than an open car of any other make, who WOULDN'T choose the bigger value the Ford gives for the money?]

CAR + RENT = A HOME

Being a Story of What Might Have Been

¶John Jones was an ordinary good citizen. He had a happy home (rented at so much per month), a good wife and two healthy, hustling youngsters.

¶Each month John paid the landlord $50.00, a moderate rental, and the Jones family was happy.

¶Came a time when John fell for the polished patter of the automobile salesman. $200.00 down and $40.00 a month he paid for his new "Four in Line" sedan.

¶For two years the Jones family enjoyed their new plaything. Then the Browns and the Grays flashed by in their "latest motor masterpieces" and the Joneses longed for more "pep," more speed, more cylinders, and four-wheel brakes. Getting a new car was the answer.

¶But—this time Jones happened to meet up with a real estate salesman. He talked—Jones listened—learned much and received a hard jolt.

¶Translated into dollars and cents here was the jolt: His car, complete—plus freight, insurance and "extras," had cost him exactly $805.21. In the two years of steady running it had travelled over 7,000 miles at an average cost of five cents per mile—total $350.00.

¶In these same two years $1,200.00 had been spent for rent. Thus his expenditures for car and rent over the two year period amounted to $2,355.21. Allowing $200.00 for the present market value of the car meant a net expenditure of $2,155.21—with nothing to show.

¶An average home would cost approximately $6,000.00. That same amount of money put into a home would have meant a clear title in seven years—and then no further payments for rent.

¶The Jones family have returned to the shoe leather route for transportation—and are paying on a home. Their former "surface" happiness now becomes genuine joy. The new car will come later.

Bristol's Many Advantages Won New Soap Industry not be a large building but one suitable to the needs of the firm.

"We will employ approximately 100 people and these will be about evenly divided between males and females," Mr. Garrigues continued.

Both Mr. Miles and Mr. Garrigues stated that the Manhattan Soap Company is not a new concern. "It has been established for 40 years," they said. The former gentleman said that the skilled help will be brought here with the firm but that the unskilled would be recruited locally. "We are pleased with Bristol and impressed with its facilities," Mr. Miles commented. He has been associated with the firm for the past 25 years.

It was made plain by both men that they do not desire the residents here to get the impression that the factory is going to be an objectionable one. "It is not," they both exclaimed. "The making of toilet soap is a much different proposition from the manufacture of laundry soap," they said.

Drawings and blue prints have been prepared for the alterations to the buildings and it is now merely a matter of completing the details.

ELECTRIC "FISH LADDERS" SAVE SALMON FISHERIES

Transportation for fish is now an established fact. By means of "fish railroads" and the longest "fish ladders" in the world, millions of salmon have been enabled to climb upstream past a 265-foot dam to reach their spawning grounds in the spring, says the Pennsylvania Public Service Information Committee.

These same fish, together with millions of young salmon, later leap safely down that same dam on their way to the sea. The electric power companies in the American Northwest have made this possible. The Northwest needed the electric power produced by the falling water, so the dams were necessary. The salmon fishing industry, however, would have been dealt a severe blow if the fish had been unable to reach their usual safe spawning grounds.

The plan was worked out successfully on the Baker River, one of the two main salmon rivers in the state of Washington, where engineers constructed a series of flumes and fish ladders with low jumps and resting pools, each with a gate to prevent the fish turning back from their trip upstream. The last stage of the journey is a tram railroad with a tank car pulled by a cable.

Nobody knew certainly that the new system would work until this year's run of salmon began, but it soon proved successful. When the downward run of young salmon started, five and six-inch fish went over the dam at the rate of about 10,000 an hour, dropping with the falling water into the deep pools below and swimming off in good condition.

How to read Percentages

Were Dodge Brothers to sell 100 motor cars one year and 200 motor cars the next, they could truthfully announce that their sales had increased 100% in a single year. Yet they would only have sold 300 motor cars in all.

In other words, PERCENTAGE of annual gain is not conclusive. The NUMBER of cars sold is the true test.

That Dodge Brothers sales in 1926 showed an increase of 27.6% over 1925 is not the MAJOR fact to consider—striking as it is.

But that Dodge Brothers sold 259,967 cars in 1925, and then in 1926 sold 331,764—a gain of 71,797 sales in twelve months—tells a story of growth that stands out like a tower on the skyline of the industry.

Three hundred and thirty-one thousand buyers LAST year! Many more vital improvements added THIS year! No increase in price! Three powerful arguments for earnestly investigating this smart and sturdy product before deciding what to buy!
